1 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Minnesota, } ss:

To the State of Minnesota, Greeting:

You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, on the eighteenth day of July, A. D. 1892, pursuant to a writ of error filed in the clerk's office of the supreme court of Minnesota, wherein Knut Aslesen is plaintiff in error and you (the State of Minnesota) are defendant in error, to show cause, if any there be, why the error mentioned should not be corrected and speedy justice should not be done to the parties in that behalf.

Witness the Hon. James Gilfillan, chief justice of the supreme court of Minnesota, this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two.

Seal of the Supreme Court, State of Minsota.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

To the judges of the supreme court of Minnesota, Greeting:

Because in the record and proceedings, as also in the rendition of a judgment in a plea which is before you in said supreme court, between Knut Aslesen, appellant, and The State of Minnesota, respondent, in an action of criminal complaint, a manifest error hath happened, to the great damage of the said Knut Aslesen, as by his complaint appears, and it being fit that the error, if any there has been, should be duly corrected and full and speedy justice done to the parties aforesaid in this behalf, you are hereby commanded, if judgment be given therein, that then, under your seal, distinctly and openly, you send the record and proceedings aforesaid, with all things concerning the same, to the Supreme Court of the United States, together with this writ, so that you have the same at Washington on the eighteenth day of July, A. D. 1892, in the Supreme Court to be then and there held, that, the record and proceedings aforesaid being inspected, the said Supreme Court may cause further to be done therein to correct that error what of right and according to the law and custom of the United States should be done.

Witness the Hon. Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two, and on the Independence of the United States the one hundred and sixteenth year.

5 Petition for Writ of Error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the Supreme Court of Minnesota.

To the Honorable James Gilfillan, chief justice of the supreme court of Minnesota:

And now comes Knut Asleson, by his attorney, and represents that in a certain cause wherein this petitioner was appellant and the State of Minnesota was respondent, lately pending in the supreme court of Minnesota, being the highest court of the State of Minnesota in which a decision in said cause could be had, there was drawn in question the validity of a statute of said State on the ground that said statute was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, more especially to the fourteenth amendment and to section eight of article one of said Constitution, and the decision was against this petitioner and in favor of the validity of said statute; and petitioner avers that in said decision and in the record and proceedings in said cause and in the final judgment therein against this petitioner, rendered on the 18th day of June, 1892, there are manifest errors, to the injury of this petitioner, as will fully appear from an inspection of said record in said supreme court of Minnesota remaining.

Wherefore this petitioner prays that a writ of error may be issued, to the end that said record, proceedings, and judgment may be inspected and reviewed and the errors aforesaid corrected by the Supreme Court of the United States.

KNUT ASLESEN,
By JOHN M. OLIVER,
His Attorney.

6 Let the writ of error issue as prayed in the foregoing petition.

Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Minnesota.

7 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

Supreme Court of the United States, October Term, A. D. 1892.

KNUT ASLESEN, Plaintiff in Error,
vs.
STATE OF MINNESOTA, Defendant in Error. } Error to the Supreme Court of Minnesota.

Assignment of Errors.

And now comes Knut Aslesen, plaintiff in error, in his own person and by his attorney, and complains and says that the supreme court of Minnesota is the highest court in said State in which a decision of the suit shown in said record, being a suit wherein the plaintiff in error was appellant and the State of Minnesota was respondent, could be had; that in said suit there is drawn in question the validity of a statute of the State of Minnesota, approved April 20, 1891, entitled "An act in relation to the manufacture and sale of lard and of lard compounds and substitutes, and of foods prepared therefrom; to prevent fraud and to preserve the public health," being chapter 12 of the General Laws of Minnesota, enacted in 1891, on the ground that said statute is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, more particularly to the first section of the fourteenth amendment and the commercial clause of the eighth section of the first article of said Constitution; that the decision of said supreme court was against this plaintiff in error and in favor of the validity of said statute, and that in said decision, as appears 8 in said record and proceedings and in the final judgment of said supreme court, there is material and manifest error as against the rights of this plaintiff in error. Wherefore he prays that the said judgment and decision of the supreme court of Minnesota may be set aside, reversed, and held for naught, and for the appropriate judgment, order, and direction of this court in that behalf.

And for more specific assignment of errors plaintiff in error says:

1. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in holding that said statute, and more particularly the third section thereof, was valid as being within the police power of the legislature "to prevent fraud and preserve the public health," and, being so valid as a police law, did therefore displace and limit the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, so far as said constitutional provision might otherwise have secured to this plaintiff in error the right to trade in or deal with the food product, cottolene, free from any conditions, restrictions, or penalties as are imposed by said statute.

2. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in holding that said statute was not repugnant to the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

3. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in holding that said statute was not repugnant to the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States providing that "The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several States," etc.

4. The supreme court of Minnesota erred in holding that a food product which does not menace or imperil the public health and which is not made use of and is not appropriate for purposes of fraud is yet subject to the police power of the legislature "to prevent fraud and preserve the public health."

5. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in affirming the judgment of the municipal court of Minneapolis imposing a fine of twenty-five dollars on this plaintiff in error, and in default of payment thereof an imprisonment for thirty days in the workhouse, for the alleged violation of the statute aforesaid, which statute is in violation of the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to wit: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

6. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in affirming the judgment of the said municipal court overruling the motion of defendant (Aslesen) therein for a new trial, which motion should have been sustained.

7. Said supreme court of Minnesota erred in affirming the rulings of said municipal court excluding the following offers of proof: "The defendant offers to prove by James Boyce, practical chemist, that he is in the employ of N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, Illinois, as a chemist; that he has been employed in the laboratory of said firm for the last five years, first as assistant chemist, and for the last two years has been chemist-in-chief; that he makes analysis of all samples of cotton-seed oil and beef stearine that are used in the manufacture of cottolene; that no materials are used except those of good quality; that no cooking fat containing no lard is on the market as a lard substitute except the cottolene made by N. K. Fairbank & Co.; that the beef stearine, which is a component part of said cottolene, is the choice, selected fat from healthy beef cattle, after subjecting said fat to pressure and pressing a natural oil therefrom; that said stearine is a wholesome, edible animal fat; that the cotton-seed oil, which is the remaining component part of said cottolene, is a pure, refined cotton-seed oil, made only from prime crude cotton-seed oil, and that said refined cotton-seed oil is a bland, neutral vegetable oil, edible and palatable and highly useful as an article of food, as well when used by itself as when blended with other fats; that it blends perfectly with animal stearines, and in such blend makes an entirely wholesome, easily-digested, and nutritious food, free from all deleterious elements; that cottolene so made, and being the only brand on the market, is a wholesome, palatable, nutritious food, agreeing well with persons of delicate digestion and of dyspeptic tendency, and in that respect is superior to lard; that said cottolene does not resemble lard in appearance, is not and never has been sold as lard, and is less liable than lard to turn rancid with long keeping; that, pound for pound, on its chemical constituents it is fully as nutritious as lard; that said cottolene is made of uniform quality and composition and was so made at and prior to April 20th, 1891.

"Defendant further offers to prove by said witness that 11 on and prior to April 20th, 1891, there were no cooking fats in the market consisting of any mixture or compound of lard with animal or vegetable oils or fats sold as a substitute for lard or having the semblance of lard other than the cooking fat made by N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, Illinois, and by some other firms, and composed of lard, lard stearine, beef stearine, and refined cotton-seed oil, and known as 'lard compound;' that said compound then and there consisted and does consist of said ingredients in varying proportions, but that said lard, lard stearine, and beef stearine are all wholesome, edible fats; that the qualities of the cotton-seed oil used therein are as aforesaid, and that said lard compounds are and were fully as nutritive, pound for pound, as pure lard and fully as wholesome, and that the commercial 'lard compound' then and now made consisted and consists of said ingredients carefully selected and skillfully blended and is more pleasing to the average taste than pure lard.

"The State objected to evidence of the character set forth in said offer and every part thereof as incompetent, irrelevant, and having no bearing on the case. Defendant's counsel thereupon stated that the object of said offer is to prove by Prof. Boyce:

"First. That no cottolene is or has been made in the State of Minnesota; and this in support of the proposition, which defendant maintains, that the Minnesota statute on which this action is based is in violation of the commercial clause of section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States, empowering Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

12 "Second. Facts showing that said statute is an unwarranted interference with the rights of property and the right and liberty of the citizen to exercise an honest and harmless calling; and these in support of the further proposition, which defendant maintains, that said statute is in violation of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

8. The said supreme court of Minnesota erred in sustaining the rulings of the said municipal court in excluding offers of proof, as shown in the bill of exceptions or statement of case contained in said record.

Wherefore and for other manifest and material errors in said record this plaintiff in error prays that the said judgment and final order of said supreme court of Minnesota may be reversed, set aside, and held for naught, with such order and direction from this court as may be lawful in this behalf.

13 Know all men by these presents that we, Knut Aslesen, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Charles M. Hertig, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, are held and firmly bound unto the State of Minnesota in the full sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid to the said State of Minnesota, its certain attorney or assigns; to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two.

Whereas lately, at a term of the supreme court of the State of Minnesota and on the 18th day of June, 1892, in a suit depending in said court between Knut Aslesen, as appellant, and said State of Minnesota, as respondent, a final judgment was rendered against said Knut Aslesen, and the said Knut Aslesen having obtained a writ of error and filed a copy thereof in the clerk's office of the said court to reverse the said judgment in the aforesaid suit, and a citation directed to the said State of Minnesota, citing and admonishing it to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States holden at Washington, D. C., on the eighteenth day of July, A. D. 1892:

14 Now, the condition of the above obligation is such that if the said Knut Aslesen shall prosecute his writ of error to effect and answer all damages and costs if he fail to make his plea good, then the above obligation to be void; else to remain in full force and virtue.

County of Hennepin, }

Municipal Court, City of Minneapolis.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Plaintiff, }
vs.
KNUT ASLESEN, Defendant. }

Complaint.

Andrew Dickey, being duly sworn, makes complaint to the above-named court, and says that on the 9th day of January, A. D. 1892, at the city of Minneapolis, in said county of Hennepin and State of Minnesota, Knut Aslesen, then and there being, did, willfully, unlawfully, and wrongfully, have in his possession with intent to sell and did offer and expose for sale and by his agent did 16 sell to affiant a certain substance made as a substitute for lard and designed to take the place of lard, and which consisted of a mixture of animal and vegetable oils and fats other than hog fat in the form of lard, to wit, a certain substance then and there called "cottolene," and consisting of a mixture of beef stearine and refined cotton-seed oil.

That he, the said Knut Aslesen, did then and there have in his possession with the intent to sell and did offer and expose for sale and by his agent did sell to affiant said cottolene in a paper package containing the same, and which said paper package was not then and there branded or labeled at all and was not then and there distinctly or legibly branded or labeled in letters not less than one inch in length with the name of the person or firm making the same, together with the location of the manufactory and the words "lard substitute" or "adulterated lard," and immediately following the same in letters not less than one-half inch in length with the names and approximate proportions of the several constituents which were then and there contained in said mixture, to wit, "cottolene;" which said sale and the possession thereof with the intent to sell and the offering and exposing for sale of said "cottolene" as aforesaid was contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the State of Minnesota. Wherefore complainant prays that said offender may be arrested and dealt with according to law.

17 Upon said complaint there was issued for the defendant a warrant in regular form, omitted here for the sake of brevity.

The defendant was arrested on said warrant on the 13th of January, 1892, brought before said court and arraigned, and did then and there plead not guilty, and waived a trial by jury.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss:
County of Hennepin, }

Municipal Court, City of Minneapolis.

(Title of Cause.)

Statement of Case.

The issues herein came on for trial before Hon. Stephen Mahoney, a judge of said court, at a regular term thereof, on the 20th day of January, 1892.

The State appeared by L. A. Dunn, Esq., assistant city attorney for said city, and by A. P. Abell, Esq., special counsel; the defendant appeared in person and by C. M. Hertig, Esq., his attorney.

To maintain the issues upon the part of the State ANDREW DICKEY, prosecuting witness, was sworn and testified as follows:

I know defendant; was at defendant's place of business, in Minneapolis, Hennepin county, Minnesota, on the 9th of January, 1892, and then and there asked him if he had "cottolene" in bulk. Defendant said he had, and I asked for seven pounds. Defendant took that much out of a wooden tub, wrapped it up in grocer's ordinary brown paper, and delivered it to me. I took it and paid for it. There was no brand on the package sold—no written or printed matter of any kind. I asked if it was considered as good as lard, and defendant said they considered 12 ounces of it would go as far as 16 ounces of lard.

18 Cross-examination:

It was a kind of fat I bought looking like lard. I saw the letters "cottolene" written or printed on the tub out of which what I bought was taken, with some other printed matter that I did not read.

Upon further question as to the appearance of cottolene the State made formal admission that the substance called cottolene is of a slightly yellowish color as compared with pure lard, and that it can be distinguished from lard by its color.

Mr. A. P. TEEL was called and sworn as a witness on behalf of the State, and was asked of what cottolene is composed. Thereupon the defendant admitted that cottolene consisted of the substances as alleged in the complaint, and that the particular cottolene sold to prosecuting witness consisted of what it is stated in the complaint to consist of. Thereupon the state rested.

The defendant, to maintain the issues on his part, was sworn in his own behalf, and testified as follows:

I carry on a bakery as part of my business in Minneapolis. I handle in my business a certain substance known to the trade as cottolene. It is used in the place of lard; is put up in tierces, tubs, and small tin pails; is of uniform color. I sold prosecuting witness some out of a wooden tub holding 50 or 60 pounds. The tub was labeled. The manufacturers of cottolene are N. K. Fairbank & Co., Chicago, Illinois. The tub from which was taken the cottolene sold to prosecuting witness had a label upon it similar to one held by my counsel, Mr. Hertig.

Question by Mr. HERTIG to defendant: "You say that the label on the tub was similar in appearance to the label now shown you?"

(This question was objected to by the State on the ground
19 that the defence must show that the label was such as is described in the statute and not a label similar to the one held by counsel.)

The defence thereupon offered to prove that cottolene was sold for what it is, as a matter of fact, and labeled accordingly.

Mr. DUNN: "If you offer to show that the tub was labeled in the way prescribed by the statute we do not object."

Thereupon Mr. Hertig, for the defence, made the following formal offer: "I expect to further prove by this witness that the tub from which the goods sold to the prosecuting witness was taken was labeled with a paper label in colors, purporting to be a trade-mark label, showing in the center the head of an ox surrounded with growing cotton and bearing in prominent letters the legend 'Golden cottolene; product of the American Cotton Oil Company, N. K. Fairbank & Co., St. Louis, Chicago, New York.' The paper on which said label was printed was of an oval shape and about a foot in diameter, and was an identical label with the one I hold in my hand."

To which the State objected as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and the court sustained the objection, and the defence excepted.

Mr. HERTIG: "State if on and before the 20th day of April, 1891, you were using cottolene in your bakery business."

(Objected to by the State as immaterial. Objection sustained, and exception by defendant.)

Mr. HERTIG: "I will ask you another question—if in your experience as a baker and proprietor of a bakery you are familiar with the use of cottolene as a cooking fat."

Mr. DUNN: "That I object to as immaterial."

20 Mr. HERTIG: "I wish to prove by this witness that it is a satisfactory, wholesome, palatable cooking fat."

The COURT: "I will sustain the objection to that question."

Mr. HERTIG: "Well, let me make a formal offer, and that will include it all. I offer to further prove by this witness that the substance called cottolene is a wholesome, palatable cooking fat, and as such is a desirable article of food."

Mr. DUNN: "That we object to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial."

The COURT: "The evidence will be excluded."

Mr. HERTIG: "I take an exception."

There was no cross-examination.

The defendant, further to maintain issues in his own behalf, called as a witness JAMES BOYCE. He testified as follows:

I reside in Chicago, Illinois; am a chemist by occupation and profession, and in the employ of N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, Illinois, the firm mentioned by Mr. Aslesen.

Upon the suggestion of saving time by making formal offer of proof the defence made the following formal offer: "The defendant offers to prove by James Boyce, practical chemist, that he is in the employ of N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, Illinois, as a chemist; that he has worked for said firm for more than seven years last past; that he has been employed in the laboratory of said firm for the last five years, first as assistant chemist, and for the last two years has been chemist-in-chief; that he makes analysis of all samples of cotton-seed oil and beef stearine that are used in the manufacture of cottolene; that no materials are used except those of good quality; that no cooking fat containing no lard is on 21 the market as a lard substitute except the cottolene made by N. K. Fairbank & Co.; that the beef stearine, which is a component part of said cottolene is the choice selected fat from healthy beef cattle after subjecting said fat to pressure and pressing a natural oil therefrom; that said stearine is a wholesome, edible animal fat; that the cotton-seed oil, which is the remaining component part of said cottolene, is a pure refined cotton-seed oil made only from prime, crude cotton-seed oil, and that said refined cotton-seed oil is a bland, neutral, vegetable oil, edible and palatable, and highly useful as an article of food as well when used by itself as when blended with other fats; that it blends perfectly with animal stearines, and in such blend makes an entirely wholesome, easily digested, and nutritious food, free from all deleterious elements; that cottolene so made, and being the only brand on the market, is a wholesome, palatable, nutritious food, agreeing well with persons of delicate digestion and of dyspeptic tendency, and in that respect is superior to lard; that said cottolene does not resemble lard in appearance, is not and never has been sold as lard, and is less liable than lard to turn rancid with long keeping; that pound for pound on its chemical constituents it is fully as nutritious as lard; that said cottolene is made of uniform quality and composition, and was so made at and prior to April 20th 1891.

"Defendant further offers to prove by said witness that on and prior to April 20th, 1891, there were no cooking fats in the market consisting of any mixture or compound of lard with animal or vegetables oils or fats sold as a substitute for lard or having the semblance of lard other than the cooking fat made by N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, Illinois, and by some other firms, 22 and composed of lard, lard stearine, beef stearine, and refined cotton-seed oil and known as 'lard compound,' and said compound then and there consisted and does consist of said ingredients in varying proportions, but that said lard, lard stearine, and beef stearine are all wholesome, edible fats; that the qualities of the cotton-seed oil used therein are as aforesaid, and that said lard compounds are and were fully as nutritive, pound for pound, as pure lard and fully as wholesome, and that the commercial 'lard compound' then and now made consisted and consists of said ingredients carefully selected and skillfully blended, and is more pleasing to the average taste than pure lard."

The State objected to evidence of the character set forth in said offer and every part thereof as incompetent, irrelevant, and having no bearing upon the case. Defendant's counsel thereupon stated that the object of said offer is to prove by Prof. Boyce—

First. That no cottolene is or has been made in the State of Minnesota; and this in support of the proposition, which defendant maintains, that the Minnesota statute on which this action is based is in violation of the commercial clause of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, empowering Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Second. Facts showing that said statute is an unwarranted interference with rights of property and the right and liberty of the citizen to exercise an honest and harmless calling; and these in support of the further propositions, which the defendant maintains, that said statute is in violation of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and is in violation also of article 23 one of the constitution of Minnesota, known as the bill of rights, and especially of section two of said article one.

The court sustained the objection and the defence took an exception.

Mr. Boyce further testified: Cottolene is made of beef stearine and refined cotton-seed oil.

Cross-examination:

The proportion is 20 to 25 per cent. of beef stearine and 75 to 80 per cent. of cotton-seed oil.

Redirect examination:

Beef stearine is the selected fat of beef cattle—that is, it is the fat subjected to pressure, whereby the oil is expressed and the stearine left. The stearine is what is used. It is a part of the beef fat. It is the stearine of the fat, whether it is beef fat or lard, which produces the shortening in pie crust. Pure lard is, as a general thing, too soft to make good pie crust, and makers of lard add stearine just to get that desired effect. It is a combination of oil and stearine that gives the requisite result in pastry.

Recross-examination:

Am not a cook, but have had the experience of eating different articles cooked with this substance. Pure lard has from 40 to 60 per cent. of stearine. Stearine is a component part of all animal fat.

The defendant further produced as a witness R. O. BEARD, M. D., who was sworn and testified as follows:

I reside in Minneapolis; am by occupation a physician; am professor of physiology in the medical department of the College of Medicine, in this city.

The court asked counsel for defence if the offer of proof by this witness will be the same as before; whereupon Mr. Hertig —: "My offer will be in brief to prove by this witness that cotton-seed 24 oil is a wholesome, nutritive, vegetable oil which delicate stomachs bear without injury, and that in that respect it is superior to lard; that it is wholesome and nutritive as aforesaid, either when used by itself alone as cotton-seed oil simply and also when blended with animal fats. That is what I propose to prove by the Doctor."

Mr. ABELL: "The same objection as to the former offer."

The COURT: "I will sustain the objection."

Mr. HERTIG: "I take an exception."

Mrs. J. W. JOHNSON was also sworn as a witness on behalf of the defendant and testified as follows: "I reside in Minneapolis." Mr. Hertig made the following offer of proof: "I expect to prove by this witness that for some months she has used cottolene in her kitchen as a housekeeper; that she finds it a wholesome and palatable cooking fat; that it will go further in practical use, pound for pound, than lard, and that as compared with lard she likes it better as a cooking fat."

Mr. ABELL: "The same objection—incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and inadmissable, as it has no bearing on the case."

The COURT: "The objection is sustained."

Mr. HERTIG: "I take an exception."

Mr. A. P. TEEL was sworn as a witness on behalf of the defendant and testified as follows: I reside in Minneapolis; have so resided for seven years; am salesman for N. K. Fairbank & Co., selling "lard compound" and "cottolene." N. K. Fairbank & Co., of Chicago, are the manufacturers of cottolene.

Q. "What can you say about cottolene, as to its quality as a food?"

Mr. ABELL: "That is objected to on the same ground."

25 Mr. HERTIG: "I offer to prove by this witness that cottolene is a wholesome edible fat somewhat more nutritive, pound for pound, than lard, wholesome and palatable; that it is not sold as lard and was not sold as lard on and prior to the 20th day of April, 1891, but has been and is always sold on its own merits; that at and prior to the 20th day of April, 1891, there were not cooking fats on the market, besides the ordinary brands of commercial lard, other than cottolene and a cooking fat composed of lard, lard stearine, beef stearine, and cotton-seed oil and sold under the name of 'lard compound;' that said lard compound was and is a wholesome and palatable edible fat and fully as nutritive, pound for pound, as pure lard. That is my offer to prove by this witness."

Mr. DUNN: "That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and as having no bearing on the case."

Objection sustained. Exception by defendant.

Q. I now wish to ask this witness a question that I did not embody in my offer, because it is somewhat different. I wish to ask him this question: "Do you know how the statute relating to the manufacture and sale of lard and of lard compound and substitutes and of foods prepared therefrom, approved April 20th, 1891, has affected the business of selling cottolene in this State?"

The COURT: "What is your question?"

(Question repeated.)

A. "I do; yes, sir."

Q. "What effect has it had?"

(Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.)

Mr. HERTIG: I expect to prove by him by the answer to this question that it has had the effect to almost completely shut cottolene out of the market.

26 Mr. DUNN: "That is objected to as incompetent and immaterial."

(Objection sustained. Exception by defendant.)

Cross-examination:

Am the agent of N. K. Fairbank & Co.; know what cottolene is; it is used for shortening and frying purposes; takes the place of lard.

Redirect examination:

Cottolene is used as an edible cooking fat in all culinary operations for which lard is used.

The defense then offered in evidence two registered trade-marks belonging to N. K. Fairbank & Co., numbered respectively 14808 and 16201, each evidenced by the certificate of the Commissioner of Patents of the United States, dated respectively October 11, 1887, and January 22, 1889, and giving to N. K. Fairbank & Co. respectively a trade-mark proprietorship in the name cottolene and a trade-mark on the particular label as above described in the testimony of the defendant, on page 3 hereof, lines 1 to 10 (folios 18, 19 hereof). The State objected to the introduction of the trade-marks as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Objection was sustained and the defendant excepted.

The case was thereupon declared closed as to the introduction of testimony, and the court, by consent of counsel for the State and defendant, set the case for argument on the 25th day of January, 1892.

On January 25th, 1892, the case was argued by counsel for the parties, who were the same on such argument as aforesaid, except that J. F. McGee, Esq., also appeared as special counsel for the State.

The court, after hearing the arguments of counsel, held that the Minnesota statute upon which this action is based, to wit, section 3 of chapter 12 of the general laws of 1891, is not nor is any part of 27 said chapter applying to this action in violation of the Constitution of the United States, as maintained by defendant in connection with his offer to prove certain facts by the witness Boyce, and that said section of said statute and all thereof applying to this action is constitutional under the constitution of the State of Minnesota; and the court found the defendant guilty as charged in the complaint and ordered and adjudged that he pay a fine of twenty-five dollars, and in default of such payment that he be imprisoned in the work-house for a period of thirty days.

(Title of Cause.)

It is hereby stipulated by and between the undersigned attorneys for the above-named parties that the annexed and foregoing statement of case is in every respect true; that the same contains all the evidence adduced on the trial of said action and the rulings and exceptions made in relation thereto, and in every respect is a true, full, and complete record of the proceedings had in the trial of said action.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the Hon. Stephen Mahoney, the judge of the above-entitled court, before whom said action was tried, may settle and allow the foregoing statement of case as the statement of the case in said action without notice to the undersigned attorneys for the plaintiff, such notice being hereby expressly waived.

It is further stipulated and agreed that the motion for a new trial in said action may be made forthwith or at any time that defendant may choose, not later than February 6th, 1892.

Supreme Court, April Term, A. D. 1892. Nos. 22, 23.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Respondent,
vs.
KNUT ASLESEN, Appellant.
} Opinion.
STATE OF MINNESOTA, Respondent,
vs.
CHARLES M. BASSETT, Appellant.

Each of the defendants was convicted of a violation of the provisions of ch. 12, Laws 1891, regulating the manufacture and sale of lard and of lard compounds and substitutes and of foods prepared therefrom. Defendant Aslesen was convicted of selling a "lard substitute" called cottolene, consisting of a mixture of beef stearine and refined cotton-seed oil, without affixing to the package containing the same a label containing the words "Lard substitute," together with "the names and approximate proportions of the several constituents contained in the mixture or compound."

The defendant Bassett was convicted of selling certain articles of food prepared with this same "lard substitute," without furnishing the purchaser with a card containing the required notice of that fact.

36 Upon the trials each of the defendants offered to prove that "cottolene was a wholesome, palatable, and nutritious article of food; also that it does not resemble lard in appearance and has never been sold as lard." This evidence the trial court excluded on the ground that under the provisions of the act the facts sought to be proved were immaterial. The court's construction of the act was clearly correct. It is evident from its language that its provisions are not confined to articles "made in the semblance of lard or as an imitation of lard" or which so resemble lard that they are liable to be sold and passed off on the public as lard, and which, for the sake of brevity, we may call "simulated articles." The act applies as well to any substance made as "a substitute for lard and which is designed to take the place of lard," and which consists of any mixture or compound of animal or vegetable oils or fats other than hog fat in the form of lard, whether such substance resembles lard in appearance or not. Neither is the act limited in its application to substances that are unwholesome. It applies alike to all "lard substitutes" consisting of the specified mixture or compound, regardless of their appearance or actual hygienic qualities. The cases, therefore, come down to the question whether the act, as thus construed, is valid as a legitimate exercise of the police power of the State.

Had the act absolutely prohibited the manufacture and sale of all such articles its validity might well be questioned. The doctrine of Butler vs. Chambers, 36 Minn., 71, does not go far enough to sustain such an act, for in that case we construed the "oleomargarine" act as applying to and aimed at those compounds

37 resembling butter in appearance and flavor and which for that reason were liable to deceive and mislead purchasers and consumers as to the real nature of the product; and the act was sustained upon the theory that if, in the reasonable opinion of the legislature, this fraud or imposition on the public could not be effectually prevented except by prohibiting the sale and manufacture of the "simulated articles" altogether it was competent for them to do so.

But the act now under consideration is one of regulation merely. It does not prohibit the sale of these "lard substitutes" or of articles of food prepared with them, but simply requires that the seller shall disclose to the purchaser, by label or card, the nature and ingredients of the articles which he offers for sale, so that the purchaser may be fully advised as to just what he is buying. As applied to such articles of food, we are unable to see why such regulations are not valid as a legitimate exercise of the police power. We think the case is not distinguishable in principle from Stoltz vs. Thompson, 44 Minn., 271, in which we sustained the validity of a similar regulation with reference to the sale of baking powders containing alum. It is a matter of common knowledge that substitutes for old and well-known articles of food are becoming quite common at the present day. Being comparatively new on the market, their qualities and ingredients are not usually a matter of common knowledge. The nature of the ingredients of these compounds is usually not discernable by the appearance of the article, and the means of ascertaining what these ingredients are are not available to the mass of the people. Many of them, like cottolene, may be entirely wholesome, but in this day of the common adulteration of articles of 38 food others may be composed of deleterious ingredients, and what may be wholesome for one person may be unwholesome to another. Moreover, it is also a matter of common knowledge that, whether well founded or not, there is a popular prejudice against certain ingredients as an article of food. This is so, for example, with cotton-seed oil. Many would not purchase or use a lard substitute of which that oil was an ingredient or any article of food prepared with it. In view of all these facts the legislature has seen fit to require the seller of these lard substitutes to label the article which he sells with what for convenience we may call a quantitative analysis of its ingredients, and to require the seller of any article of food prepared with such lard substitute to give notice of the fact to the purchaser, so that he may know just what he is buying. This certainly does not deprive the seller of his property without due process of law. No man has a constitutional right to keep secret the composition of substances which he sells to the public as articles of food. Such regulations do certainly have some real or substantial relation to the objects aimed at, to wit, as expressed in the title of the act, "to prevent fraud and to preserve the public health." They do not impair any fundamental rights of life, liberty, or property. Under such circumstances we cannot say that the legislature has exceeded the legitimate exercise of the police power of the State. If the legislation is unwise or inexpedient the only appeal is to "the ultimate tribunal of the public judgment exercised either in the pressure of public opinion or by means of the suffrage."

Judgments affirmed and causes remanded with directions to carry the sentences into execution.

OCTOBER TERM, 1895.

KNUT ASLESEN, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

vs.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

CHARLES M. BASSETT, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

vs.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

BRIEF OF DEFENDANT IN ERROR.

Statement of Facts.—The plaintiff in error was convicted of a violation of the provisions of a statute of Minnesota enacted in 1891 (G. L. 1891, c. 12), regulating the manufacture and sale of lard compounds and substitutes and of foods prepared therefrom. The statute in question does not appear in the record, but will no doubt be printed in the brief of the plaintiff in error. As the two above-entitled causes arise from the same statement of facts and involve the same questions, the defendant in error respectfully requests that this brief may serve as its brief in both causes.

Question Stated.—The assignments of error at all important may be stated in brief as follows:

1. That the statute in question violates the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the said statute is repugnant to the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, providing that "the congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several states."

The first assignment is disposed of by the decisions reached in the following cases:

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678.

Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461.
